

Guide to Revocation Rights

Your right to revocation

You have the right to revoke the search contract within a period of fourteen days, without stating a reason.

The revocation notice period is fourteen days upon contract execution.

In order to exercise your right to revoke the contract, you must state your name, address, phone number, fax number, and email address, and notify us clearly of your decision to revoke this contract (e.g. by informing us by post, fax, or email). You are welcome to use the standard revocation form below, but this is not a requirement.

For compliance with the law, you need to send your revocation before the notice period expires.

What happens after revocation?

Once you revoke the contract, we are required to reimburse all payments received from you within fourteen days of receiving your notification, including all shipments costs incurred (except for surcharges incurred for any special shipment method you choose that exceed our standard shipment costs). Unless otherwise agreed upon with you, we shall reimburse the subject payment amounts using the same mode of transaction used by you for the original transaction, whereby you shall not be charged for any transaction fees.

In the event you authorized us to commence our service during the revocation notice period, you shall pay us a fee computed on a pro rata basis as the ratio of the services rendered until receipt of the notice to the total scope of services that would have been rendered during the course of the contract.
